Established in September 2003, the Center for Gifted Studies and Education is designed to encourage high-level achievement in diverse kinds of learners, focusing on children and youth in urban environments who exhibit exceptional gifts and talents. The Center supports professional development programs and research opportunities for New York City educators interested in working with gifted students. Under the guidance of Dr. Dona Matthews, the Center recently initiated a Gifted Program in Special Education at Hunter College. The Center is also working in conjunction with the Hunter College Campus Schools, which comprise an elementary school and a high school serving students with advanced academic abilities
